

A close-up, high-angle shot of a printing press mechanism. The image is dominated by metallic components, including gears, belts, and various mechanical parts. Several ink rollers are visible, each with a distinct color: orange, yellow, green, and blue. The colors are applied in a gradient-like pattern across the rollers. The lighting is dramatic, with strong highlights and shadows that emphasize the texture and complexity of the machinery.

CLOSED LOOP CONTROL

MODERNIZE YOUR PRESS, INCREASE YOUR PROFITS

TECHKON

WHY CLOSED LOOP?

Closed loop press side color management improves the stability of your print processes on older presses. This is especially important as customers continue to demand greater color accuracy and color consistency from their print supply chain.

Rather than turning away or losing business because you can't meet a customer's quality specifications or pricing expectations, modernizing your presses with closed loop makes it possible to deliver the right product at the right price, while increasing your profit margins.

ATLANTIC PACKAGING

Atlantic Packaging encompasses 18 locations throughout the U.S., the Caribbean, and Central America. They offer offset, flexo and digital technology that allows them to produce virtually any size run from 200 – 200 million on various substrates from paper to board to film.

To be one of the best, if not the best printing facility in the industry, we must purchase excellent tools for our skilled pressmen. We installed Techkon's closed loop system on our 2008 Heidelberg CD-102. Once the system went into full production, I recognized that the previous jobs we printed and saved into memory would reach color very quickly compared to our older presses. I will have to say I am truly impressed.
